

Define HRM. Explain the stages of Recruitment, Selection, Training and Development.

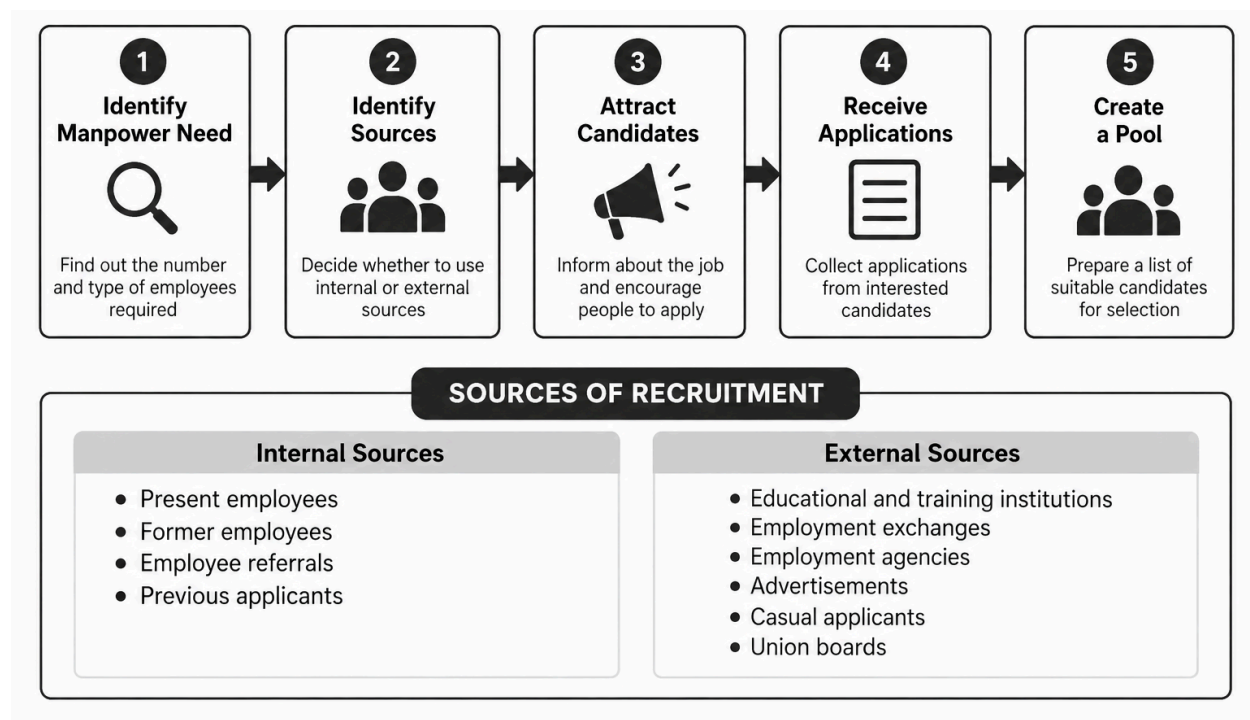

Human Resource Management (HRM) is a strategic approach to managing the people in an organization.

It helps the organization to use the knowledge, skills and abilities of employees to achieve its objectives.

HRM Workflow

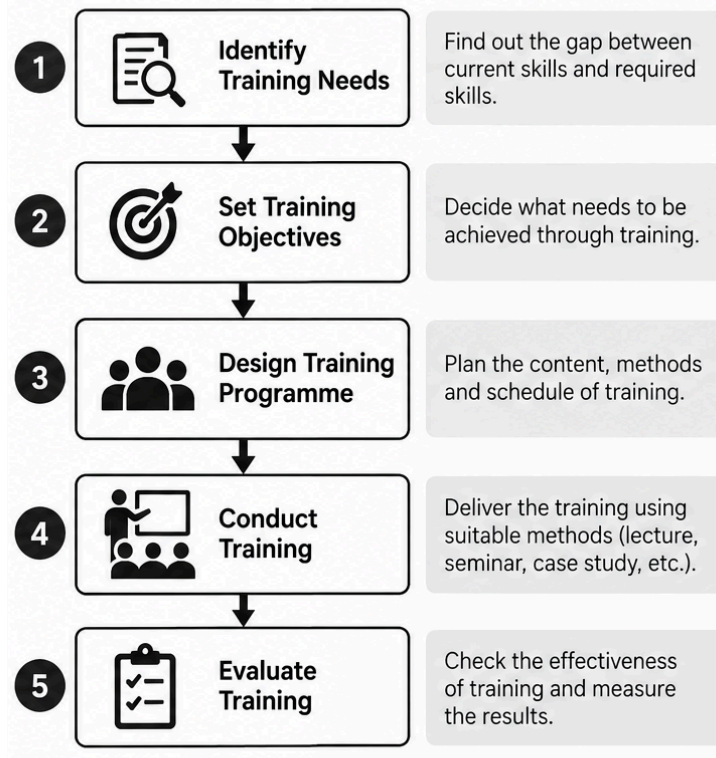

1. Recruitment Process

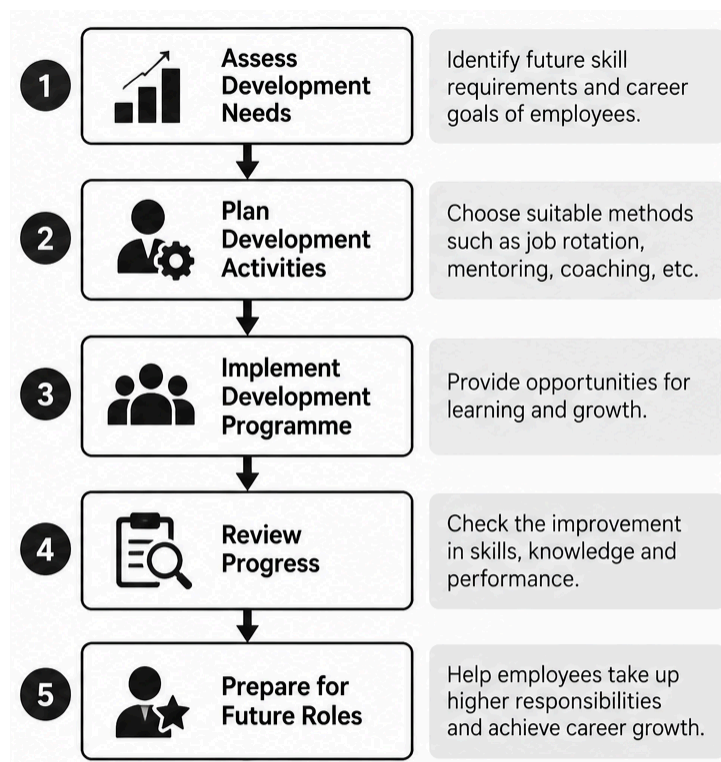

2. Selection Process

3. Training Process

4. Development Process

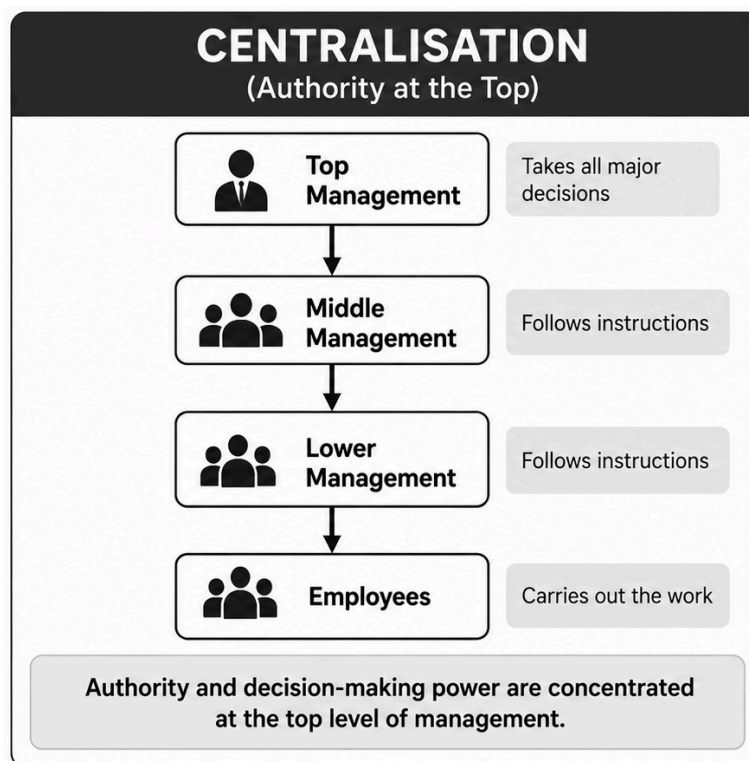

Explain Centralisation and Decentralisation.

Centralisation and decentralisation are two ways of distributing authority and decision-making power in an organization.

- Centralisation – authority is mainly kept at the top level of management.
- Decentralisation – authority is distributed to different levels of management.

Centralisation

Centralisation means that important decision-making authority is concentrated at the top level of management.

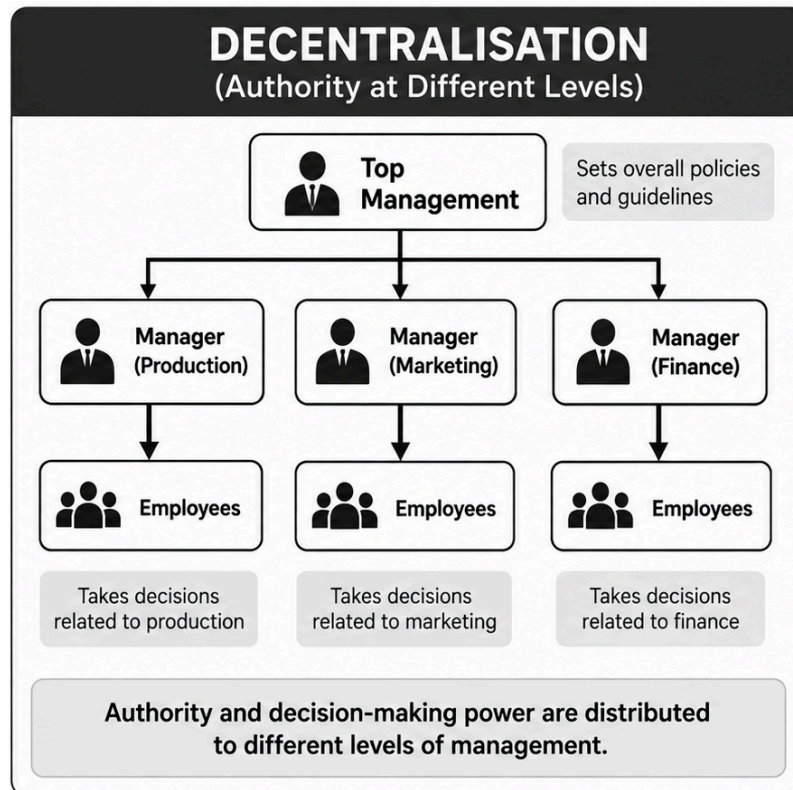

Features of Centralisation

1. Major decisions are taken by top management.
2. Authority is concentrated at the higher level.
3. Lower-level managers have less freedom to make decisions.
4. Decisions are controlled by senior managers.
5. It provides uniformity in decisions.

Decentralisation

Decentralisation means distributing authority and decision-making power through different levels of management.

Advantages of Decentralisation

1. Reduces the burden of top management.
2. Allows managers to focus more on strategic matters.
3. Encourages decision-making at different levels.
4. Helps employees and managers take responsibility.
5. Can increase employee motivation.

Disadvantages of Decentralisation

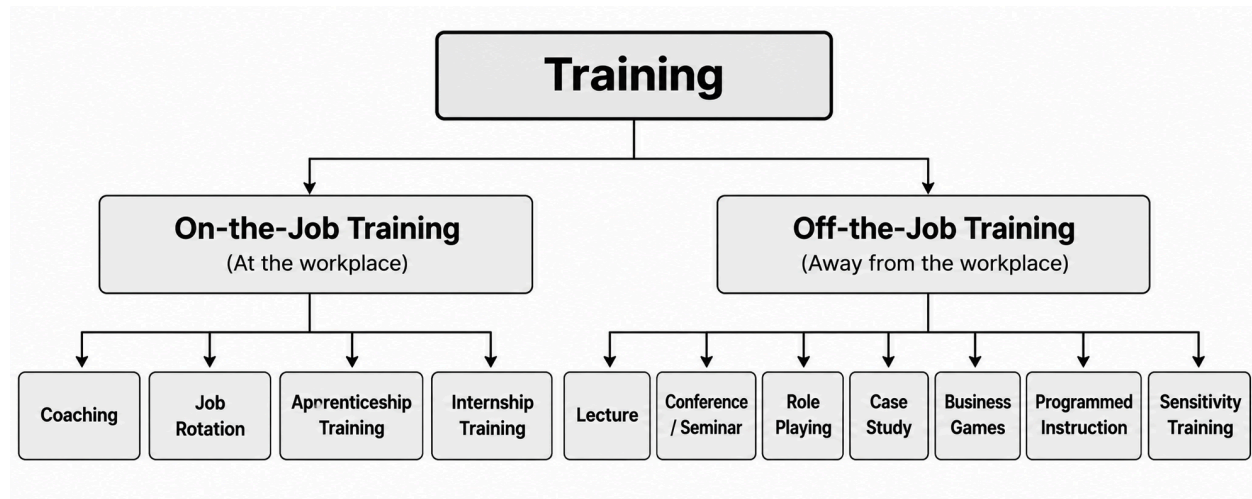

1. It can be difficult to maintain a uniform company policy.
2. There may be duplication of work.
3. It requires managers with proper skills and experience.

Centralisation vs Decentralisation

Centralisation	Decentralisation
Authority is concentrated at the top.	Authority is distributed to different levels.
Top managers make major decisions.	Managers at different levels make decisions.
Lower-level managers have less authority.	Lower-level managers have more authority.
Decision-making is mainly centralized.	Decision-making is spread throughout the organization.
Top management has a greater workload.	The workload of top management is reduced.
Less freedom for lower-level managers.	More freedom and responsibility for lower-level managers.

Explain On-the-Job Training and Off-the-Job Training.

Training is the process of improving the knowledge, skills and ability of employees to perform their jobs effectively.

On-the-Job Training

On-the-job training is a method in which employees learn while doing the actual job at the workplace.

The employee gets practical experience under the guidance of a supervisor or experienced worker.

Methods

1. Coaching – An experienced person guides the employee while doing the job.
2. Job Rotation – Employees are moved between different jobs to gain experience.
3. Apprenticeship Training – Employee learns a skilled job under an experienced person.
4. Internship Training – A learner gets practical work experience in an organization.

Example: A new software developer works with a senior developer and learns how to develop and test applications while doing the actual project.

Off-the-Job Training

Off-the-job training is a method in which employees receive training away from their actual workplace.

It mainly provides knowledge and develops skills through planned training activities.

Methods

1. Lecture – Trainer explains the subject to a group of employees.
2. Conference / Seminar – Employees learn through discussions and presentations.
3. Role Playing – Employees act out a situation to learn how to handle it.
4. Case Study – Employees study a real or imaginary problem and find a solution.
5. Business Games – Employees learn management skills through simulated business situations.
6. Programmed Instruction – Learning is provided step-by-step through planned materials.
7. Sensitivity Training – Employees learn about their behaviour and relationships with others.

These training methods are included in the Unit IV notes.

Difference Between On-the-Job and Off-the-Job Training

On-the-Job Training	Off-the-Job Training
Training is given at the workplace.	Training is given away from the actual workplace.
Employees learn by doing the actual job.	Employees learn through planned training activities.
More practical.	More theoretical and simulated.
Uses actual work situations.	Uses lectures, cases, role playing, etc.
Example: Coaching	Example: Lecture

Different Sources of Recruitment with Examples.

Recruitment is the process of searching for suitable candidates and encouraging them to apply for jobs in an organization.

The sources of recruitment are mainly divided into:

1. Internal Sources
2. External Sources
