

Define HRM. Explain the stages of Recruitment, Selection, Training and Development.

Human Resource Management (HRM) is a strategic approach to managing the people in an organization.

It helps the organization to use the knowledge, skills and abilities of employees to achieve its objectives.

HRM Workflow

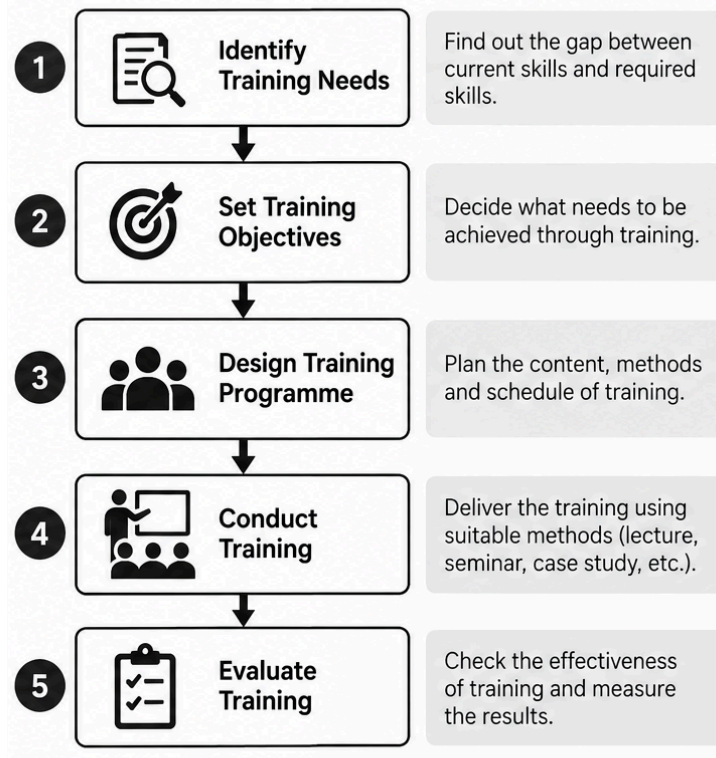

1. Recruitment Process

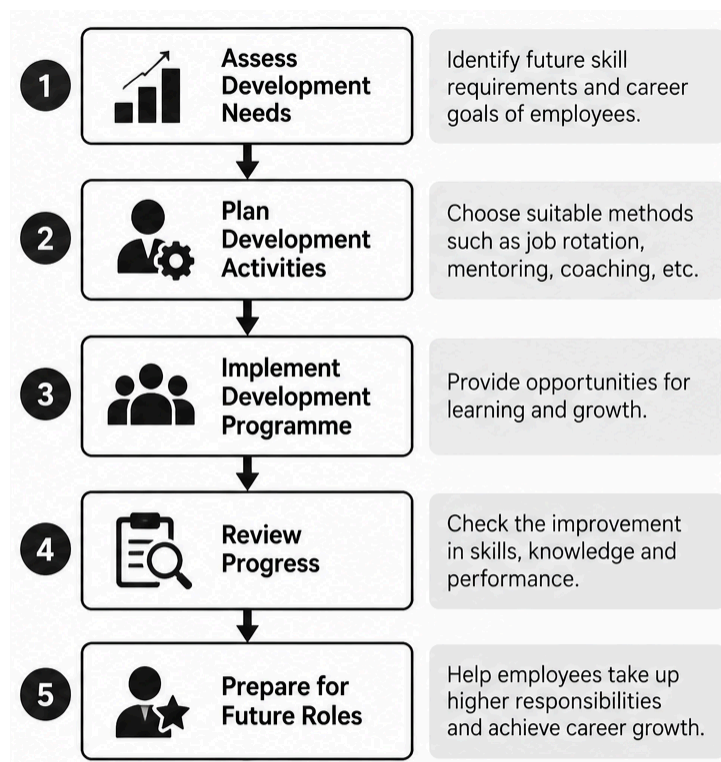

2. Selection Process

3. Training Process

4. Development Process

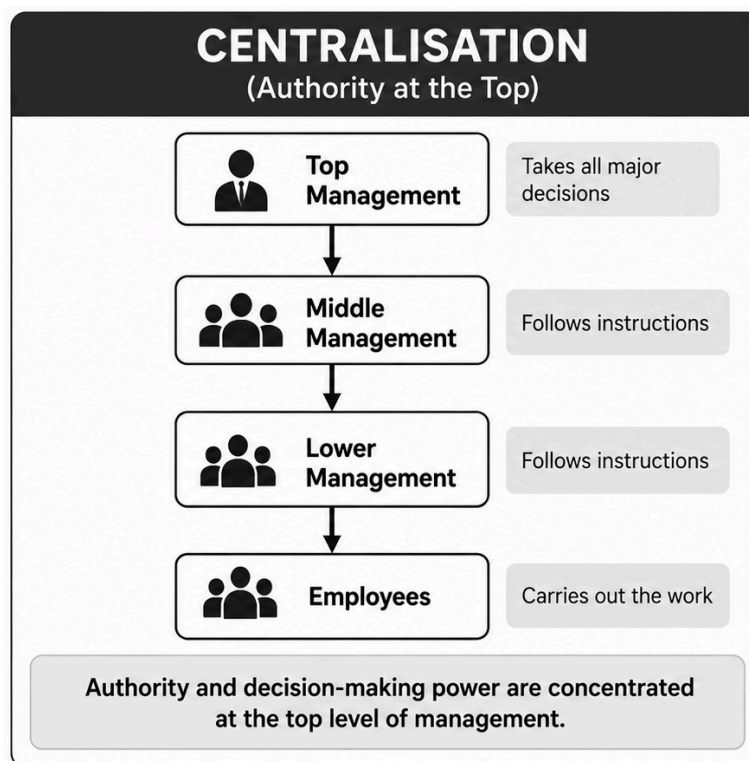

Explain Centralisation and Decentralisation.

Centralisation and decentralisation are two ways of distributing authority and decision-making power in an organization.

- Centralisation – authority is mainly kept at the top level of management.
- Decentralisation – authority is distributed to different levels of management.

Centralisation

Centralisation means that important decision-making authority is concentrated at the top level of management.

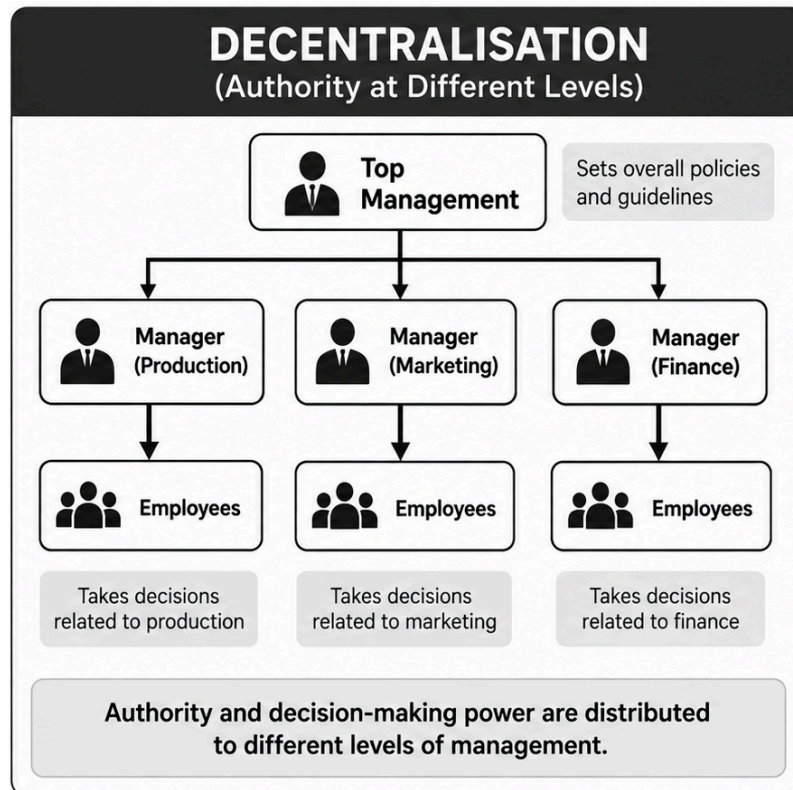

Features of Centralisation

1. Major decisions are taken by top management.
2. Authority is concentrated at the higher level.
3. Lower-level managers have less freedom to make decisions.
4. Decisions are controlled by senior managers.
5. It provides uniformity in decisions.

Decentralisation

Decentralisation means distributing authority and decision-making power through different levels of management.

Advantages of Decentralisation

1. Reduces the burden of top management.
2. Allows managers to focus more on strategic matters.
3. Encourages decision-making at different levels.
4. Helps employees and managers take responsibility.
5. Can increase employee motivation.

Disadvantages of Decentralisation

1. It can be difficult to maintain a uniform company policy.
2. There may be duplication of work.
3. It requires managers with proper skills and experience.

Centralisation vs Decentralisation

Centralisation	Decentralisation
Authority is concentrated at the top.	Authority is distributed to different levels.
Top managers make major decisions.	Managers at different levels make decisions.
Lower-level managers have less authority.	Lower-level managers have more authority.
Decision-making is mainly centralized.	Decision-making is spread throughout the organization.
Top management has a greater workload.	The workload of top management is reduced.
Less freedom for lower-level managers.	More freedom and responsibility for lower-level managers.